Background: In 2006 and 2007 the Department of Health (DOH) reviewed the profession of licensed counselor to determine the appropriate level of regulation. Recommendations were made in a department report in 2006 and a work group report published in November 2007. The Legislature passed 2SHB 2674 which required registered counselors (many of whom were already working towards another licensed credential) to obtain another newly created health profession credential by July 2010 when the registered counselor credential was eliminated. The new category of health professionals this bill created include agency affiliated counselor, certified counselor, certified advisers, as well as associate level and trainee credentials for some existing counseling professions. Requirements were established for education, experience, scope of practice, and disclosure. The Secretary of DOH had authority for discipline and licensing of registered counselors. Although the former category of registered counselor will be discontinued and no longer require regulation, the newly created categories of health professional will need to be regulated. 2SHB 2674 did not address the authority to regulate these newly created health professions.

This analysis was prepared by non-partisan legislative staff for the use of legislative members in their deliberations. This analysis is not a part of the legislation nor does it constitute a statement of legislative intent.

The health professions are agency affiliated counselors, certified counselors, certified advisers, associates in mental health counseling, marriage and family therapy and social work, and trainees in the chemical dependency profession.
